Child care arrangments

Parental care is care by the child's parent, guardian, or stepparent, either at work or at home.

Relative care is care by a relative of the child (including siblings 15 years or older), either in the child's home or someplace else.

Family daycare is care by a family daycare provider or by someone who is not a relative of the child away from the child's home.

Nanny or sitter care is care by someone who is not a relative of the child in the child's own home.

Formal daycare is care in a child or day care center, nursery or preschool, or Head Start program.

Young sibling is that the child either cares for his or herself or is cared for by a sibling under age 15.

^{} Rows do not sum to 100% because mother's may have multiple children who can be in various kinds of care. In both 1997 and 1999 16% of mothers using child care used more than one kind of arrangment for their children under age six.

Child care arrangments:

Parental care is care by the child's parent, guardian, or stepparent, either at work or at home.

Relative care is care by a relative of the child (including siblings 15 years or older), either in the child's home or someplace else.

Family daycare is care by a family daycare provider or by someone who is not a relative of the child away from the child's home.

Nanny or sitter care is care by someone who is not a relative of the child in the child's own home.

Formal daycare is care in a child or day care center, nursery or preschool, or Head Start program. Young sibling is that the child either cares for his or herself or is cared for by a sibling under age 15.

^{} Rows do not sum to 100% because mother's may have multiple children who can be in various kinds of care. In both 1997 and 1999, 18% of mothers using child care used more than one kind of arrangment for their children under age four.
