Shinui demands vote on J'lem synagogue

By Jonathan Lis -Iaaretz Correspondent

The Shinui faction of the Jerusalem city council called yesterday for a referendum on whether to construct another synagogue in the capital's Givat Masua neighborhood. Some 30 Givat Masua families, represented by Shinui city council member Boaz Atzmon, have declared their opposition to construction of a new synagogue in their neighborhood. The call for a referendum in the neighborhood, which could establish a precedent that could have ramifications for other cities, is based on the High Court of Justice ruling requiring that a local authority "examine the character" of a neighborhood, as well as viable nearby alternatives, before authorizing the opening of a shop for the sale

"The mayor should take the feelings of the residents into consideration. A minority of one kind or another, religious or secular, should not impose its will on the majority," Atzmon said. He also noted that Givat Masua was established as a secular neighborhood, and although "no one is against establishing synagogues, the moment there are some, the money should then be invested in a community center that will serve the resi-

In response to a question Atzmon submitted at a recent city council meeting to Jerusalem Mayor Uri Lupolianski, the mayor wrote: "You must be aware of the fact that religious and traditional families live in this secular neighborhood. From information gathered we learn that we must take into consideration that 40 percent of the residents need and use various religious services. A simple calculation shows that we must plan 10 synagogues and we should work to fill this gap." Shinui's country-wide forum of city council members which allows party members to act on the municipal level on issues where it is limited at the national level because of coali tion constraints - has taken up the cause. Council members in Hod Hasharon, Karmiel, Netanya, Tel Aviv and Ashdod are expected to demand neighborhood referendums in the coming weeks to prevent the construction of various religious institutions.

"I am not afraid of a referendum," Yehoshua Pollak, Jerusalem city council mem ber for United Torah Judaism, said. "In Jerusalem it can give a clear answer to everyone regarding the need to establish synagogues. However, I am concerned about similar surveys being held in other

PMO sends Hazor burial | Mikveh proves earliest Jewish presence in Ein Karem workers' back pay

Religious burial society workers from the northern Galilee town of Hazor returned to work yesterday after being promised they would receive back pay in a few days.

Last week, claiming they had not received salaries for nine months, workers refused to bury Galina Zisman, who lived in Hazor, marking the second time within a week that they refused to bury a deceased resident. The Prime Minister's Office subsequently decided to transfer NIS 113,000 to the burial society workers. Hazor local council head Shaul Raz-Khamisa said that the council would provide another NIS

Yaakov Maimon, chairman of the Hazor Religious Council, said however that the payment covered only two months of salaries, and added that he hoped it meant that the rest would be paid shortly.

Local researchers claim they have found the first evidence of Jewish settlement in the village of Ein Karem, on the western side of Jerusalem, during the Second Temple period (the village was incorporated into the city a few years ago).

By Amiram Barkat

The researchers claim that a water cistern that was uncovered a number of years ago in the cellar of the village's Church of St. John the Baptist is none other than a mikveh, a Jewish ritual bath, from the Second Temple period (from 536 B.C.E. to 70 C.E.). This discovery could be important for Christianity as well, since the cistern is the first evidence to support the traditional view that Zachary, St. John the Baptist's father, lived in Ein Karem.

Graves, wine presses and other evidence discovered in Ein Karem testify to settlement at the site from the time of the Canaanites (3000-1200 B.C.E.), but until now no evidence has tied the village to the era of the New

Father Sahler, a Franciscan monk and archaeologist who randigs in the village in the 1840s, found a mysterious Second Temple-period ritual baths hole in one of the cellars of the monastery there. The hole was not far from St. John's birthplace, according to Christian tradition.

Sahler did not attribute any importance to the discovery and assumed it was a water hole. A few months ago, the monks allowed Israeli researchers Dr. Moshe Amirav and Tamar Hirdani to see the hole. Amirav, an Ein Karem resident and lecturer in political geography at the University of Haifa, said "As soon as we saw it, we thought it looked like a ritual bath." Prof. Ronny Reich, an expert on and the chairman of the University of Haifa's archaeology department, ver ified the researchers' assumption. Reich recognized a number of elements at the site that were unique to the ritual baths at that time.

According to Amirav, discovery of the mikveh proves that a priest lived at the site, as the priests had to immerse themselves in the baths three times a day. However, the monastery's abbot and his deputy do not accept this analysis and maintain it is merely a regular cistern. It is possible Amirav's approach has contributed to this position, as he has called on the monastery at the site to discuss allowing visitors free access to it.

IBA to change time, place of English radio news

By Daphna Berman

The Israeli Broadcasting Authority's English News will no longer be available on Reshet Aleph radio station as of Sunday, Ha'aretz has learned, and will also have its 15-minute time slot moved a half hour earlier to 6:30 a.m. on its new station, Reshet Reka.

The 1:10 p.m. time slot will also be moved up to 12:30, and the 8 p.m. show will also be pushed back to 8:30.

Critics are deriding the decision because Reshet Reka - a station for immigrants that broadcasts for the most part in Russian and Amaharic - has poor reception in certain parts of the country, including Eilat, the Galilee, and certain parts of the

One source in the IBA said the decision would be a "death blow" that would "wipe out the bulk of listeners. A lot of people, including foreign journalists and diplomats have made sure to wake up and listen to the program."

The decision was made Tuesday, and was told to IBA English news employees on

In a letter dated September 2003, Communications Minister Ehud Olmert gave staff at the English-news radio a written promise that the broadcast would not be changed, but neither he, nor the IBA, responded to Ha'aretz inquiries on the matter

Information about dubbing and subtitles is supplied when provided.
